

Major Brockbridge spoke eloquently on the other side of the House. He is the son of John C. Brockbridge, once Vice-President of the United States. He is 44 years old, a man of medium stature, well built, and has brown hair and moustache. He is a member of the House of Representatives, and is a member of the Committee on War and Navy Affairs, and, since Mr. Carlisle's entry into the Senate, is said to be the best informed man on the Democratic side of the House with regard to the war. He is a quiet, reserved man, of a dignified and mannerly of a student. He spoke without notes, in a clear voice and in a simple and direct manner. He spoke for an hour upon the floor and in the galleries. He said that even before his case had been considered for the first time, he had been told that the use of argument upon the floor of the House by the Republican members of this committee, by the Republican members of the House, was a violation of the principles of the case, and referred

[illegible][illegible]

The yeas and nays were ordered, and Representative Democrat left the House but Col. O'Ferrall, who called "No quorum," feeling that it was impossible to obtain a quorum without four members, adjourned the House.

There was no change in the situation on Monday Sept. 22. The first business was the approval of Friday's Journal. Every Democrat voted for it. Then the yeas and nays were ordered and a quorum voted. A roll of the House was taken and the House adjourned. The Republicans were angry and threatened to issue orders of arrest for the Democrats. The orders of arrest had been signed by Speaker and were lying upon his desk, awaiting the passage of the resolution by the House. The Speaker, however, stated that he would march upon the Democrats and arrest some of them to make a quorum before they could leave the Capitol. Major McKinley, however,

In the evidence taken in case of John Winn, freight conductor on the Miami and Vice, it was shown that he was killed at Redford station, on the Peterborough Railroad, on Thursday morning, in attempting to assist on the caboose while the train was making a stop. He was seen to jump from the side of the caboose panned over him, cutting his right leg off between the ankle and hip, and left it off between the knee and hip. It was also shown that he was not on the train when he was missed the train was backed up and he was found concealed in the woods. It would appear that he would allow anything to be done for him, but he directed the brakeman who came to him to remain on the train, and he himself made arrangements to take charge of his train, and put it on the main line, so as to prevent collision with a passenger train. He then made the brakeman go on ahead, and he himself made sure that all was safe. He then marked that he had performed his last duty.

[illegible]

of Europe there has been a practice of filling cognac by exposing the bottles on the shelves for years.

100